

To improve the life outcomes of young men and boys of color

Building Capacity : Professionals

HARDWIRED BY NATURE:

School Design Through an Equity Lens

This highly active and engaging workshop is designed:

- To increase educators' awareness of achievement, fairness and opportunities ("Educational Equity") in the learning experiences of students of color.
- To deliver quality learning and programming experiences through an equity lens.

During this workshop, educators take a deeper look at systemic inequalities, traditional educator dispositions about students of color, and community systems that impact the educational outcomes of students of color. It informs educators how to respect, use, and understand culture to enhance school design and learning experiences that result in successful academic and social outcomes for students of color. Using videos, movement-based activities, songs, laughter, and sometimes tears, this workshop will increase the capacity of participants to improve the life and educational outcomes of students of color by creating Educational Equity environments.

We have served over 500 educators, policymakers, counselors, administrators, and other youth advocates in the Denver Metro area in the past 3 years.
